The Lewis County Community Recovery Center is the only New York State certified outpatient chemical dependency treatment facility in Lewis County.

The current staff offers a variety of services to individuals and their families who are somehow affected by the use of drugs and alcohol. Individuals who are referred will each be evaluated for the appropriate level of services. The individual will then be placed in these services with special emphasis placed on the specific needs this person has.

The Center offers group therapy, individual therapy, family therapy, couples therapy and crisis intervention when appropriate.

Each person who is admitted for service is assigned a primary counselor to work with them on their personal and individual issues.

We offer specialized groups for DWI offenders. We also offer groups for relapse prevention, ongoing recovery and women's issues. The Recovery Center's Medical Director is nationally certified to provide Suboxone therapy. Suboxone is a prescription medication for individuals in the process of quitting the use of any opiate based drug. This program has a special support group associated with it as well.

The Center accepts all types of health insurance and Medicaid. There is a sliding fee based on an individual's ability to pay. The staff will assure that each person will be offered an opportunity to pay what they feel they can afford.
